Ex-detentos descreveram abusos que vão desde espancamentos severos e violência sexual a rações de fome, recusa dos cuidados médicos ou privação das necessidades básicas incluindo água, luz do dia; eletricidade para mulheres também foram usados como saboneteiras sanitárias. Em uma investigação de meses, B'Tselem entrevistou 55 ex-prisioneiros alojados em 16 prisões israelenses e centros detidos pelas Forças Israelenses da Defesa (IDF), mapeando a escala do abuso. O grupo altamente respeitado baseado na Jerusalém concluiu que as prisões israelitas deveriam agora ser rotulada como "campo das tortura".

"Quando começamos o projeto, pensamos que encontraríamos evidências esporádicas de casos extremos aqui ou ali mas a imagem emergida é completamente diferente", disse Yuli Novak.

Israeli Air Strike Kills 35 Palestinians in Rafah Camp

An Israeli air strike on a camp for displaced Palestinians in Rafah, in the Gaza Strip, left a death toll of 35 on Sunday night. The lawyer Zuhair, 36, witnessed the scene of terror as an explosion rocked the area while he watched the news with friends.

The lack of warning and the slow arrival of aid increased the number of victims. The crowd initially tried to rescue the wounded with their bare hands, carrying them on carts pulled by donkeys or cramming them into individual cars to search for help.

Sharif Warsh Agha, a 32-year-old driver, described the scene as a "vision of hell" with bodies burned and mangled by the initial explosion and the subsequent fires. Agha transported nine people, including children and a woman with a wound to the chest, in his small car which normally carries two people.

The Israeli strike took place in a camp for displaced Palestinians established by Kuwait at the beginning of this year to shelter displaced people. Although the camp was outside the "humanitarian zone" along the coast announced by Israel in May, it was not within the specific areas of Rafah subject to evacuation orders.

A witness said the strike seemed to have been caused by a US-made GBU-39 missile, which carries a 17 kg explosive charge. The New York Times found in previous investigations that coincided with the Israeli army's claims about the amount of explosives used. GBU missiles weigh 110 kg in total, including the metal casing which can turn into shrapnel. They can penetrate 3 meters of concrete.

The Israeli army said the target was a Hamas commander of high rank and suggested that the fire could have been caused by a secondary explosion. It did not provide more evidence of the suspected presence of Hamas weapons in the area.

Refugee camps are full of flammable objects that could explode and cause fires, such as gas cylinders.

The victims included many people from Beit Lahia, as many communities remained united while fleeing through Gaza. Among them was the friend of Zuhair, Ahmed Zayed, who left behind a young child, born after a 10-year struggle with infertility.

Zuhair quiere que su amigo alegre y ambicioso sea recordado. "Me encanta mencionar su nombre para asegurarnos de que el mundo sepa que nuestros muertos no eran solo números. Tenían vidas y metas."
